

Americans Reject Obama Dictatorship

By Samuel L. Blumenfeld

One clear message the voters sent Barack Hussein Obama on November 3rd, is that they are not willing to become slaves under an Obama dictatorship. Even though the first giant step toward his dictatorship had been taken with his totalitarian National Healthcare Act, Americans made it clear that they reject this socialist road to serfdom.

The enactment of Obamacare signaled the destruction of our Constitutional Republic and the limits it placed on government power. With National Healthcare those limits no longer exist. We no longer have a government whose purpose is to secure the God-given, unalienable rights of its citizens. Until November 3rd, we had a government, the purpose of which was clearly to serve the ambitions of one man: Barack Hussein Obama. But now, the voters' rebellion will force Obama to change his strategy.

The Founding Fathers created our Constitutional Republic to prevent the federal government from becoming the servant of one man, and that is why they created a separation of powers between the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of government. The system has worked relatively well for over two hundred years. But it has never been assaulted by someone like Obama.

The story goes that when the Founding Fathers completed their work in fashioning our Constitution, Benjamin Franklin was asked by a lady, "Dr. Franklin, what have you given us?" He replied, "A republic, if you can keep it."

The sad truth is that we have not kept it. Yes, we still have the Bill of Rights that guarantees freedom of religion, freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom to own and bear arms. But to Obama, they are simply obstacles which are making it more difficult to achieve his goal. If only he can get enough minorities and illegal aliens to vote, they may still help him win the presidential election of 2012 and bring the left-wing Democrats back into power in the House of Representatives.

Dictators are narcissists who cannot tolerate anyone or anything that stands in the way of what they want. They crave obedience. Obama wanted National Healthcare, and he was not about to let Scott Brown derail his plan to grab federal power. And so he did all in his power to make sure that the Democrats voted as he wanted. We may never know exactly how he was able to extract obedience from the few resisters. But apparently Democrat Congressmen are the least able to resist their leader even when it comes to enacting a law clearly in conflict with the Constitution.

The fact that Obama, with the help of Pelosi and Reid, was able to extract total obedience from the Democrats, gave him the confidence that there was nothing he couldn't overcome on the road to dictatorship. His hatred of America, inculcated by his mother and his communist and socialist friends, gave him the determination to change this country into something he could tolerate: a socialist dictatorship.

Obama was raised and then abandoned by his America-hating mother, and spent twenty years listening to the rants and ravings of an America-hating preacher. His political history in Chicago reveals that he was ambitious from the very beginning and not above stepping on the toes of other would-be rivals.

In the U. S. Senate he bided his time until he saw the opportunity to run for the presidency, despite the fact that Hilary Clinton was the Democrat party's anointed one. In his campaign he offered the American people "hope and change" which resounded nicely among our semi-literate, poorly educated citizens. His demagogic rhetoric managed to overcome Hilary's shrill, insufferable lecturing.

Obama knew early on that he had a talent for oratory, combined with sharp intelligence and the ability to lie convincingly. Being a family man gave him the positive image of a faithful husband and a loving father, which many conservatives saw as a hopeful sign. But Obama's relation to his family is quite different from his relation to the American people and their government. He may love his family, but he spent virtually all of his life learning to hate America. And so, his political ambition was to remake America into the country his mother and Reverend Wright could love. That meant, at the very least, changing America into a Socialist Welfare State.

But Obama's young mother not only hated American capitalism, she also hated its racism, which is why she was attracted to African and Indonesian husbands who were also Muslims. That also probably made her anti-Jewish. Nor did Reverend Wright have any love for Jews. That is why it was so easy for Obama to treat Israeli Prime Minister Netanyahu like an enemy. It's in his reflexes.

To become the first American dictator is no easy job. He had to overcome so many obstacles standing in his way. But if that is his ambition, then we have to examine and judge everything he does in that light.

There is one columnist, David P. Goldman, writing under the name Spengler, who was able to analyze Obama months before his election as president. The following excerpts are taken from an article published on March 26, 2008 in Asia Times Online:

“Cherchez la femme,” advised Alexander Dumas in: “When you want to uncover an unspecified secret, look for the woman.” In the case of Barack Obama, we have two: his late mother, the went-native anthropologist Ann Dunham, and his rancorous wife Michelle. Obama’s women reveal his secret: he hates America....

Barack Obama is a clever fellow who imbibed hatred of America with his mother’s milk, but worked his way up the elite ladder of education and career. He shares the resentment of Muslims against the encroachment of American culture, although not their religion. He has the empathetic skill set of an anthropologist who lives with his subjects, learns their language, and elicits their hopes and fears while remaining at emotional distance. That is, he is the political equivalent of a sociopath. The difference is that he is practicing not on a primitive tribe but on the population of the United States.

Obama came on the scene when America was most vulnerable. The Bush administration had made Republicans quite unpopular, and the left had pounded Bush for getting us in a war by lying about weapons of mass destruction. Along came young, fresh Obama, who promised “hope and change,” which the voters bought hook, line, and sinker.

But now that the voters know what Obama meant when he told them he was going to transform America, they have stopped him in his tracks. How Obama carries forth his agenda during the next two years will us more about this would-be dictator than anything else.
